Re: G7 Environment Ministerial - newsletter opening for clearance

Hi Mark! When [redacted] cleared our newsletter, she wanted to change this passage from this -Regarding climate change, Pruitt stated that, even though the United States withdrew from the Paris Agreement,

To this-
Regarding climate change, Pruitt stated that, even though the United States has decided to withdraw[R31] from the Paris Agreement,

It is a technical change, since our withdrawal won't be immediate.

Is this verbiage ok with you?

Thanks! Caron

Hi Mark!

Was Lincoln able to clear this? We need to get the newsletter to our public affairs for general clearance before pushing out the newsletter, so if he hasn't cleared it, I'll re-write a broader version to focus on Italy as the 2017 G7 President, rather than having the Environment Ministerial on the front page.

Thanks!

Hi EPA friends!
Could one of you please clear this for the cover article of our ESTH newsletter?

Thanks!

The G7 Environment Ministry
The Group of Seven (G7) industrialized democracies includes the United States, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom, and the European Union. As the 2017 G7 President (the responsibility rotates annually), the Italian government has so far organized a heads-of-state summit, six ministerials, and numerous preparation meetings in various parts of the country; another six ministerials are planned for September-November. The Italian Ministry of Environment, Land, and Sea staged the G7 Environment Ministers' Meeting in Bologna, Italy on May 11-12. The U.S. delegation was headed by Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Scott Pruitt. The Italians forged a substantive two-day agenda that included discussions about climate change with a focus on Africa; the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs); the role of multinational development banks in helping countries meet the SDGs; G7 countries' actions to curtail marine litter; and how ecologically-focused fiscal reform can improve sustainable development. EPA's negotiation team met with G7 counterparts over the course of several months preceding the meeting in Bologna so that the ministers could agree on a Communiqué

Highlights of the consensus reached include sharing environmental innovations; leveraging resource efficiency including the “3 Rs” (reduce, reuse, recycle) to create economic growth and new employment opportunities; further implementing the G7 Action Plan to Combat Marine Litter that strengthens the coherence, efficiency, and effectiveness of existing international efforts; and the “5-year Bologna Roadmap,” an action plan ranging from sharing practices on international materials management to raising public awareness to encourage less wasteful lifestyles.

This looks good, [Ex. 6 - Personal Privacy] thanks much. Below is my edited version - I put yellow highlights where it might not have been clear that I made an edit. The green-highlighted terms are ones I just want you to check to be sure they are right. (I thought SDGs was the old term, and now we are using something else, like the 2030 Agenda, but maybe I'm confused...) With this focus on the environment ministerial, I don't think you need to clear it with [Ex. 6 - Personal Privacy]; EPA clearance should be fine.

Can you send me a copy of the 5-year Bologna Roadmap? I don't think I've seen that yet.
How was the Health preparatory meeting today? Kelly was happy that you were able to sit in and take notes.

Hi [Ex. 6 - Personal Privacy],
Here is the newsletter cover article in lieu of the general history article. I appreciate your edits and will then get this to EPA for clearance. (As always, PA will clear the entire newsletter after individual components are cleared by relevant people.)
Lee, please imbed the link.
